CONCLUSION

The Indian education system is a complex and often fragmented landscape, presenting a myriad of opportunities interwoven with a few notable discrepancies. In this project, I aimed to draw insightful conclusions from the data gathered through a comprehensive survey, shedding light on the nuances and potential improvements within the system.

In order to gather the opinions of the public, I had surveyed a select group of volunteers by inviting them to participate in a questionnaire. When I took a look at the responses provided by the people, most have graded Finland
